

Better Oral Health for a Healthier Pregnancy

Dental care while pregnant

With everything you have to consider during pregnancy, paying special attention to your oral health doesn't always get the attention it deserves. It should, because there are several dental-related problems that are more likely to develop during pregnancy due to the changes happening to your body.

You want to be extra focused on the following oral health conditions, but don't worry—early detection and treatment can prevent them from causing long-term harm to you or your baby.

- Gingivitis is usually identified by red, swollen gums that may even bleed when you brush. Since this can often lead to severe gum disease (periodontitis), prompt treatment is your best defense.
- Tooth decay can be an issue for a pregnant woman who has never had a cavity before. Increased acidity in the mouth is a side effect of morning sickness and dietary changes.
- Loose teeth or tooth loss can occur frequently when you're pregnant because of elevated levels of hormones, which can affect the tissues and bones that keep your teeth in place.

- Periodontitis is an infection of the gum tissue and bone that support your teeth. Periodontitis can also develop from hormonal changes in pregnancy or as a reaction to bacteria. The same bacteria can actually get into the bloodstream and affect the fetus. Pregnant women who have periodontitis may be seven times more likely to have a baby that is born too early (premature) or too small (low birth weight).¹

Approximately 40% of pregnant women have some form of periodontal disease. In addition, pregnant women who have periodontal disease may be seven times more likely to have a baby that is born too early (premature) or too small (low birth weight).¹

To minimize your risk of dental health issues during pregnancy:

- Schedule regular dental visits starting early in the pregnancy. Tell your dentist you're pregnant so they can evaluate you with the increased risks in mind.
- Tell your dentist the details about any drugs and prenatal vitamins you are taking, as well as specific medical advice your doctor has provided.
- Don't put off cleanings and X-rays that can help detect problems early. The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists has ruled X-rays not only safe, but important, as are root canals and filling cavities that could lead to further complications if left untreated.
- Eat healthy foods that give you and your baby healthy nutrients like calcium, proteins and vitamin A, C and D, which will help your baby develop.
- Avoid sugary snacks even if you have sweet cravings. With an increased risk of tooth decay, the less sugar the better.
- Floss once a day and brush twice a day using a soft-bristle brush and fluoride toothpaste—they're the best front-line defense against gum disease.

CareFirst enhanced benefits

CareFirst members who are pregnant may be eligible for enhanced benefits including additional dental and vision benefits. These services may be covered at no cost ($0) to the member.

- Call your dentist if you notice any of the following: bad breath, gums that are painful to the touch, discolored, shiny or swollen; loose teeth; sores; lumps or growths in your mouth; toothache or general mouth pain.

Your dentists and hygienists are educated and equipped to detect what could develop into serious problems for you and your baby. And seeing them during your pregnancy is a great opportunity to discuss good oral health habits for newborns. A little planning and regular visits to the dentist are simple solutions that provide an invaluable payback.
