

Good Oral Health Can Lower Diabetes Costs

Severe gum disease can complicate diabetes. Luckily, quality dental coverage and a regular dental regimen are simple steps you can take to keep gum disease from impacting your health.

The good news? Preventive oral hygiene is proven effective.

Preventing and treating gum disease and other conditions in people with diabetes can help keep blood sugar levels in check. Receiving good dental care can also help you look and feel better—while saving money.

You can prevent dental problems associated with diabetes by:

- Informing your dentist that you have diabetes
- Controlling blood sugar levels
- Seeing your dentist at least twice a year for regular cleanings
- Brushing your teeth twice a day for about two minutes each time
- Using floss at least once per day—ask your dentist or hygienist to show you how
- Coordinating care between your periodontist, general dentist and personal physician if you are a severe diabetic or have periodontal disease
- Following dietary instructions

Protect your health and save money, consider a dental insurance plan

CareFirst enhanced benefits

CareFirst members with diabetes may be eligible for enhanced benefits including additional dental and vision benefits. These services may be covered at no cost ($0) to the member.

Without regular dental checkups, people with diabetes face increased risk of:

- Infections. Since diabetes compromises the immune system, people with diabetes are more likely to develop infections.
- Thrush and burning mouth and/or tongue. People with diabetes who take antibiotics to fight infections are especially prone to developing thrush. Thrush is a fungal infection of the mouth and tongue that thrives on high sugar levels in the saliva.
- Dry mouth. Uncontrolled diabetes can decrease saliva flow, leading to dry mouth. As a result, diabetics may experience soreness, ulcers, tooth decay or mouth infections.

People with diabetes who go to at least one dental checkup save, on average, $549 on total healthcare costs each year.¹
